

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FORESTERS, 1900-

Contains correspondence, notes on articles submitted to the Journal of Forestry, unpublished surveys and studies, committee reports, and material relating to the internal affairs of the Society. Covers 1907 to the present.

Founded in 1900, the Society of American Foresters is the professional organization of foresters in the United States. The collection, with a few exceptions, documents its activities since 1920. Of special importance are a number of unpublished surveys: industrial forestry and world forestry education in the 1920s; and state forestry administrations in the 1940s. There is much about forestry school accreditation, the Society's work on various resource committees during World War II, and the controversies over the Civilian Conservation Corps and the reorganization of federal conservation agencies during the 1930s. The richest material on individuals is found in the files of the period when H.H. Chapman was president of the Society.

N.b.: Manuscript boxes #77-95 contain the papers of Samuel T. Dana. This material deals mainly with forestry education. The Dana collection consists of these main categories:

(A) Note cards digesting material from Journal of Forestry's and other sources (provenance lost). Roughly 60% of these cards concern programs at various universities.

(B) A series of notebooks listing results of various questionnaires circulated regarding forestry education.

(C) Notebooks containing notes (rearranged later by subject) of interviews with faculty members of various universities. Source is identified for each note.

(D) Chapters, bound in notebooks, of a study on forestry education. These chapters consist of outlines containing both general considerations and statistical and other data.

(E) Files containing material concerning programs and budgets at various universities.

(F) Miscellaneous files, a proportion of which concern (are labeled to correspondence to) several of the chapters of item (D) above.
