Mister
TIM BURR

The editors want you to meet Tim Burr. At the bottom of this and the adjoining page is chronicled a typical adventure in the life of Mr. Burr. We don’t know exactly where he works: he doesn’t last too long in any one place. He works in the woods a while; he has been known to work in the mills; he lays off occasionally, too. By now, branch personnel offices have learned to expect that he will show up every so often. It’s not that he isn’t a good worker—he is. The unfortunate thing about Tim is that he’s a dope when it comes to safety. Sure, he reads the signs posted in the mills and camps. He tries to be conscientious. Just ask him. He’ll tell you he tries. Actually, there is only one thing wrong with Tim: he doesn’t keep his mind on what he’s doing. When he doesn’t keep his mind on what he’s doing, something is bound to happen. Things happen to Tim all the time. (Any similarity between his adventures and those of actual people is somewhat intentional.)
