FOREST HISTORY SOCIETY ISSUES SERIES

America doesn't have a fire problem. It has many fire problems.

That's why historians and policy makers turn to the Forest History Society for information. We provide historical context for today's complex fire problems.

In America's Fires: A Historical Context for Policy and Practice, Stephen J. Pyne offers an overview of America's fire issues and policies that can inform current and future debate. His analysis shows it's imperative for the nation to review its wildland fire policies and find ways to adapt to rapidly changing conditions. Pyne's concise explanation of this vital topic is ideal for classroom use.
